

NATIONAL GUARD MAY GET PAY FROM GOVERNMENT

Adjutant-General Sale Believes Uncle Sam Should Extend Aid to Organized Militia.

CHAMBERLAIN BILL FAVORED

Friends of the Measure Now Pending in Congress Believe Its Passage Would Insure More Adequate Defense Without Enlarging Army.

Sharing the opinion of a majority of those in close touch with the military needs of the country, Adjutant-General W. W. Sale believes the time has come when the Federal government should do more to promote the general efficiency of the organized militia by providing compensation for National Guardsmen.

"Public sentiment does not favor a large standing army," said General Sale yesterday, "and if the United States is to have an adequate defense it seems to me that a strong National Guard is the only solution."

Many military authorities believe that the passage of the Chamberlain bill, which has been introduced before the present Congress, would, in a measure, solve the problem. The measure was introduced in the United States Senate by Senator Chamberlain of Oregon, chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, and in addition to many provisions designed to improve the methods of training and administration in the militia, it embodies the principle of Federal compensation for militia service. The compensation provided for is said to be a small percentage of the pay allowed in regular army service, ranging from 5 to 15 per cent in the case of officers, and amounting to 25 per cent for enlisted men.

IMPROPERLY REFERRED TO AS "MILITIA PAY"

In some instances this has been referred to as "militia pay," but it is probably more appropriately designated as pay for militia expenses, for it is claimed that sums which National Guardsmen would receive would scarcely be more than enough to reimburse them for the expenses which they naturally incur in the performance of the duties for which they volunteer. Advocates of the bill are confident of its ultimate passage.

COMPENSATION NEEDED TO RAISE STANDARD

The pending legislation is a matter which has been given some attention by Congress for the past five years. For more than a decade the vision of opinion in the National Guard as to whether Federal compensation for the militia would be a good thing. The situation appears to have changed, however, as it has been made clear what is required of the militia to make it an efficient and dependable force for the national defense. It is now generally realized that the standard of the militia must be raised, and compensation for those who engage in the service of the National Guard.

The National Guard is said to constitute the oldest and the largest organized military force for some time.

In a study of the military resources of the country, the history, achievements and possibilities of the National Guard could hardly be overlooked. It offers not only medium of great value for training private citizens of the country for military service, and affords a means of providing the nation with the security of a large and well-trained force of mobile troops.

Cannot Require Guard Bill.

According to an opinion rendered yesterday by the Attorney General, the Administrative Board cannot require the Virginia Railway and Power Company to lay a guard rail on the First Street viaduct. Mr. Pollard held that the viaduct is a private right of way, and that, therefore, beyond the jurisdiction of the board.
